PAPER READ BY CHAUNCEY D. BAKER, CAPTAIN AND QUARTERMASTER, UNITED STATES ARMY, BEFORE THE INTERSTATE NATIONAL GUARD ASSOCIATION AT COLUMBUS, OHIO, MAY 5TH.

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN OF THE ASSOCIATION:

It is not possible in the compass of a single paper to afford any material instructions as to the details of the work of the Quartermaster's Department, and this paper will be limited to an exposition of the general scope of the duties of the Department, with some general hints upon the conduct of its affairs.

All that can be done is to take a comprehensive glance at the general scope of the departmental duties and point out some of the more salient features.

Under the regulations governing the army the Quartermaster's Department is charged with the duty of providing means of transportation of every character, either under contract or in kind, which may be needed in the movement of troops and material of war. It furnishes all public animals employed in the service of the army, the forage consumed by them, wagons and all articles necessary for their use, except the equipment of cavalry and artillery. It furnishes clothing, camp and garrison equipage, barracks, storehouses and other buildings, constructs and repairs roads, railways, bridges, builds and charters ships, boats, docks and wharves needed for military purposes, and attends to all matters connected with military operations which are not expressly assigned to some other bureau of the War Department.

It is immediately apparent that the duties devolving upon an officer of the Quartermaster's Department are of so varied a nature and so wide in their scope that necessity exists for the application of the most approved business principles of the execution of the requirements imposed.

The first and most urgent consideration in the inception of any undertaking is the organization of the enterprise along such lines as will enable one responsible head to administer its affairs in such fashion as to economize time, avoid friction, minimize expense, and produce the highest possible degree of efficiency as the result of the means at hand.

In order to secure so desirable an outcome the most thorough system should be introduced and maintained, and the work should be accordingly organized under general heads or sub-divisions for the purpose of convenience, facility, and accuracy in administration.

In the office of the Quartermaster General of the army it will be found that the work is sub-divided into fourteen different branches, as follows:

1. Money Accounts.—For the examination of the monthly accounts of all officers of the Quartermaster's Department.

2. Clothing Supply.—To which is referred all requisitions for clothing and equipage, and all questions pertaining thereto.

3. Rail and River Transportation.—All matters pertaining to transportation of troops and supplies by rail and river.

4. Regular Supplies.—All requisitions for general supplies.

5. Property Returns.—The examination of officers' property returns—quarterly.

6. Finance.—To which all requisitions for funds pertain.

7. Reservations.—Pertaining to military reservations and roads.

8. Cemeterial.—Transportation and interment of remains of deceased soldiers and care of national cemeteries.

9. Ocean Transportation.—The ocean transport service. Operation, repairs and maintenance of transports.

10. Records.—Preservation of records of all papers passing through the office.

11. Barracks and Quarters.—Permanent and temporary.

12. Inspection and Personnel.—Pertaining to all questions affecting the personnel of the Department.

13. Miscellaneous Claims.—Of all character.

14. Architectural Draughtsmen, Etc.—Sub-division of Barracks and Quarters.

In the office of the Quartermaster General are half a dozen or more officers, captain and field officers, attached as assistants, each of whom is charged with the conduct of one or more of the branches noted. At the head of each branch is a principal clerk, responsible for the conduct of its affairs. All communications received come first to the Chief Clerk of the Department; matters of large importance are brought at once to the attention of the Quartermaster General; routine business passes through channels for necessary record direct to the various sub-divisions of the office. If of ordinary nature it is at once acted upon by the officer directly in charge; if of considerable importance, it is brought by him before the Quartermaster General. In this way the Quartermaster General can give personal attention to all matters of material significance and minor affairs are disposed of without consuming his time. By this means all functions of the office are clearly established, and a definite responsibility is fixed for every act.

Errors of omissions can be readily traced to the party at fault, and the likelihood of their recurrence is reduced to a minimum.

It is of first importance that the work of every quartermaster's office be organized along similar general lines of systematic order.

There should be the definite responsibility of his clerical force, if he have clerks, for certain lines of duty in his office; of his other subordinates for the particular work assigned, each responsible in his own sphere, and each reporting in his turn to his superior, from the lowest laborer to the principal clerk; each separately held to account for his own special duty, and yet all centering in one responsible headship, the quartermaster himself—each expected to carry out his independent routine so that only such matters as require executive action need come before the quartermaster, and yet the whole so disposed that any ordinary trivial matter upon assuming any unusual phase of importance shall not be able to escape the immediate attention of the officer in charge, who alone is responsible for the successful operation of his department.

As a rule the quartermaster's duties will be confined to a few, perhaps less than half, of the subjects referred to these various branches, nor will his office and working force be as a rule sufficiently extensive to distribute the work in any such measure as herein suggested. His force may consist of a single clerk, or it may be that the quartermaster himself may constitute the whole of the clerical and executive staff of the office.

In this case organization and orderly method is none the less important. In this case it resolves itself into a matter of bookkeeping and taking up consecutively the tasks of the office. The orderly methods of a business office should be studied, as well as the requirements of the Army Regulations. Careful attention to these matters will prevent future troubles with accounting officers in the handling of public funds and property. And right here permit me to remark that what is by laymen called red tape in the army is the one thing that procures order instead of chaos. As well let the soldier be the judge of the necessity and frequency of his absences as to let him be the judge of articles needed for his proper care and maintenance.

Having clearly grasped the importance of a rigid system in the conduct of his affairs, and disposed his office and working force accordingly, be it great or small, and which has been determined by the quartermaster according to the extent of the duties he may be called upon to discharge, and the most effective means of meeting the demands upon him as they arise, he will find that by no means the least of the requirements cited in the quartermaster's creed is that all-embracing paragraph which recites that he shall care for "all matters connected with the military operations which are not expressly assigned to some other bureau of the War Department."

In the exercise of the practically discretionary powers thus broadly set forth it is often hard to draw the line as to where the quartermaster should take up a work, and just where his acts should cease. However, this is only one of the many points which arise wherein the judgment of the quartermaster must come into play, and wherein the best interests of the service will be consulted in making a decision as to the course to be pursued.

The question of the furnishing of all classes of quartermaster's stores and supplies required for, must promptly receive the attention of the quartermaster. This duty is one which for garrison is guided in all its details by army regulations and current orders. For the field it is important to limit all classes of supplies to such as are required for use in the field and these should be of the simplest and most serviceable character. In the effort to do too much there is always the temptation to do something that is unnecessary, and in the matter of furnishing supplies it is almost as great an error to burden an army with a lot of non-essential stores as to provide an inadequate supply.

In this matter good, plain common sense is the only proper guide. No absolute rule can be laid down, but the exigencies of each particular situation, in the field, on the march, or under the stress of an active campaign, will readily appeal to the practical consideration of the responsible officer. For example, I may say that in my service, I have seen inexperienced quartermasters carefully scanning the regulations and current manuals and orders, to discover excuses for requiring for additional supplies; I have seen regimental quartermasters in the field who were in actual need of a dozen of an article and who yet made requisitionn for ten times that amount, because there existed authority for the supply of that number; and so on through the entire list of articles, practically all of which were subsequently returned to depots or turned over to other quartermasters in the original packages in which they were received. On the other hand, I have seen a green regiment in the expectation of early active service in a foreign country, come into camp without shoes, blankets or uniform—clad in ragged clothing and provided with hats of pathetic pattern; without tentage of any kind, and unsupplied with any form of transportation whatsoever; without food and without cooking utensils, and in this condition of total unpreparedness when everything so vitally necessary to the soldier should have been urgently called for, the first request made upon the Quartermaster's Department was for none of these indispensable essentials, but for a refrigerator, and for a wheelbarrow; yet be it said that this same regiment was within six weeks time the best equipped, best drilled, best disciplined and best conditioned regiment in the entire army corps of 36,000 men, of which it formed a part.

The United States is the most liberal government in the world in the matter of quality, quantity and variety of the supplies of every character furnished its army in the field, and the necessaries, comforts, and conveniences provided at its garrisoned posts. This is not only true of those supplies furnished by the Quartermaster's Department, but applies to all of the supply departments, the manifest object aimed at being the attainment and maintenance of the highest degree of efficiency in its forces. The actual requirements in each instance will be seen to differ widely, yet with precisely identical ends in view. In brief, it is quite evident that the soldier in garrison should have furnished him all reasonable supplies of every character, the most suitable quarters, the greatest degree of comfort, and every facility for recreation and relaxation provided for by existing authority, and which a generous government contemplates. In the field the conditions are reversed and the great fighting machine called an army should be stripped of all its superfluous impedimenta, and the mechanism under such conditions will be found to operate most smoothly with just the bare requirements for the camp, the march and the battlefield.

When the great war captain of our nation—General Grant—took command of the eastern army, his first study was not what he could add to the impedimenta of the army, that had been more than three years in trying to march from Washington to Richmond, but what he could dispense with without crippling the efficiency of that army. The result was that the allowance of transportation to each regiment for the carrying of its impedimenta of all classes was made one army wagon. And with that allowance of transportation in the Army of the Potomac, was fought the last year of the war.

The quartermaster having carefully considered the subject of supply under the various conditions to which I have briefly adverted, the next point for him to solve is the question of accountability and responsibility, which embraces both property and funds. With reference to the matter of funds the question for the quartermaster is simply one of careful compliance with existing regulations as to custody of official checks and cash, and with reference to methods to be employed in making disbursements, transfers and deposits, and of carefully providing himself with the written approval of higher authority to cover his official acts pertaining to financial matters. A careful perusal of the Quartermaster's Manual and an observance of the requirements therein laid down will serve as a guide which ought not to be difficult to follow.

The question of property accountability is one which is possessed of perhaps more complexity, but by proper measures the responsibility of a quartermaster for property for which he is accountable can be confined practically to that locked within the doors of his storehouses.

In order that the Quartermaster's Department shall fully perform all its functions to its fullest capacity, it is necessary that a large amount of property in the form of equipage, tools, etc., for which the quartermaster is accountable, shall be in the hands of other officers, troops or civilian employees. In order not to cripple the interests of the service there should be no hesitation about letting out such property as provided in Army Regulations, which at the same time provide for the exchange of a memorandum receipt which properly accounts for the property.

Every non-expendable piece of property issued to employees, all articles temporarily in use by officers, and such stores actually issued, but not invoiced, should be covered by the memorandum receipts. All discharged employees should clear their property receipts before payment is made them. Memorandum receipts of officers for property not turned back should be filed with the return of the accountable officer, and will relieve him in the premises.

Sundry receipts of the same officer should be consolidated at regular intervals acting as a continual reminder to the officer of the property for which he is responsible. Careful expenditure lists, timely action in the matter of the condemnation of worn out property, and the use of other such facilities provided by regulations, will, when coupled with the safeguards mentioned, make the matter of property accountability and responsibility not a difficult one to compass with success and credit.

No quartermaster should hesitate to assume either responsibility or accountability for property when circumstances so demand, and very simple methods are at hand for his protection in the adjusting of any questions that may arise.

The necessary supplies obtained, the matter of accountability therefor clearly defined, and measures of fixing responsibility fully provided for, the quartermaster will naturally turn to the other head, under which most of his remaining duties will be classed, namely: that of army transportation.

Of all the branches of the work of the quartermaster there is none more important or more interesting than that of the transportation of troops and supplies. Whether this be done by the great transports that have come into existence since the beginning of the Spanish-American war, or by the humble pack mule, or even where the supplies are carried by the man himself, all these means are connectedly working together for one common purpose, that is, the bringing of the supplies and troops to that point where they shall be of the greatest use to the commander of the army.

Upon the successful transportation of troops and supplies has depended the success or failure of more than one great army; in fact it may be safely said that the superiority of one army over another in the matter of its transportation will go far towards making that army superior to its opponent, unless in other respects it shall be found very materially deficient.

Upon this subject of army transportation it may be stated that in our service the Quartermaster's Department, in addition to a long list of duties recited, and many others that are not specifically set forth, provides all transportation of whatever kind, both for troops and material of war; it supplies all animals used of whatever character; furnishes transportation by rail and river, by wagon and pack mule, and supplies ocean transports for beyond the sea freight and travel. It is the duty of the department to build bridges, railways, ships, docks and wharves as a means of transportation. It mans, equips and operates every style of transport, from the ocean-going steamship down to the coolie that carries the load upon his back. It carries the water that supplies the troops in garrison and camp, and removes the sewage.

In addition to the transportation of its own supplies, it is for the Quartermaster's Department to carry the supplies of every department of the government when called upon to do so. A commander, contemplating a proper and adequate supply for his forces, whether in peace or war, in garrison or on the march, should give timely notice of his intentions to his quartermaster, indicating at what points supplies should be placed, and for what period of time. The quartermaster will then, from the general instructions of the commanding officer, carefully consider the matter and estimate the amount of supplies to be carried with the troops, and the quantity to be provided at various points, the time when they will reach their destination, when the movement should begin, and furnish the necessary transportation.

In doing all this the first subjects for consideration will be the amount and character of the means of transportation available, the country to be passed over, the distance and character of the roads, the difficulties to be encountered, whether from bridges, streams, the enemy, or other obstacles, the probable time required, and so on, and the necessary arrangements will be made accordingly. It is always wise to embrace every possible factor for safety in all calculations regarding transportation. It is the duty of the quartermaster also, in such cases, to provide for the successful continuous forwarding of supplies as they may be needed.

The young quartermaster in entering upon his duties will find available, varying of course with the particular conditions with which he finds himself surrounded, transportation for either one or the other or perhaps a number of the kinds which have been mentioned; or he may be required to assemble such transportation and organize it into a working system. He will have wagon transportation, of course, from which he will derive full value by intelligent arrangement and organization.

For a large corral such as existed for the supply of Gen. Lee's corps in Cuba and other attached organizations, eleven wagon trains of twenty-five wagons each, were required, the railroad facilities being found wholly inadequate.

In each train were twenty-five army wagons.

In the organization of a corral of such dimensions, it was necessary to elaborate a system as complete as for the organization of a regiment, as follows:

A superintendent of corrals was in general control. His working staff was composed of a corral master, responsible for the cleanliness and the orderly arrangement of the corral and the good discipline and general supervision of animals and men within its limits. In addition he had charge of the men's mess.

A superintendent of transportation, in charge of all teams and trains at work, responsible for their proper equipment and efficiency.

For each train, one wagonmaster, responsible for its condition and operations, and one assistant wagonmaster, to whom he could delegate some portion of his duties; and twenty-five teamsters; each teamster was made responsible for his team, and also all property in his possession, and by means of delivery tickets for every item of supplies entrusted him for transportation.

A forage master was responsible, upon signed receipts, for all forage and for its proper feeding.

A superintendent of shops directed the work of blacksmiths, saddlers, wheelwrights, painters and other shops, and within each shop one man acted as foreman and was held responsible for the work.

A foreman of laborers was responsible for the unskilled labor; a property clerk kept the individual property account of each employee, made requisitions for necessary materials required for repairs and kept stock of all property on hand. Each of these employees had well defined duties and no conflict could arise. This wagon train operating over a distance of eleven or twelve miles, rough road, was able to carry a greater quantity of supplies than could be transported by a single line of railroad in operation on a parallel line; and in its state of reduced numbers, was finally disbanded on May 20th, last year, after handling many hundreds of millions of pounds of stores, during nearly four years of operations without the loss of a single article, except in the beginning a few minor items of commissary supplies, for which the teamsters responsible for the loss promptly paid the full value in each case.

The organization of pack trains in Cuba, was along similar lines, the principles of responsibility and organization being applied in the same manner and it is needless to say with the same gratifying results.

In preparing for the Annual Encampments there are certain points which the commanding officer of the troops should communicate to his quartermaster in ample time to provide for procuring supplies and making arrangements for all the details which the quartermaster may be called upon to make. I will here undertake to enumerate them in a general way and if the quartermaster does not receive his full instructions on all these heads, he should apply to his proper commanding officer for such instructions as he may care to give.

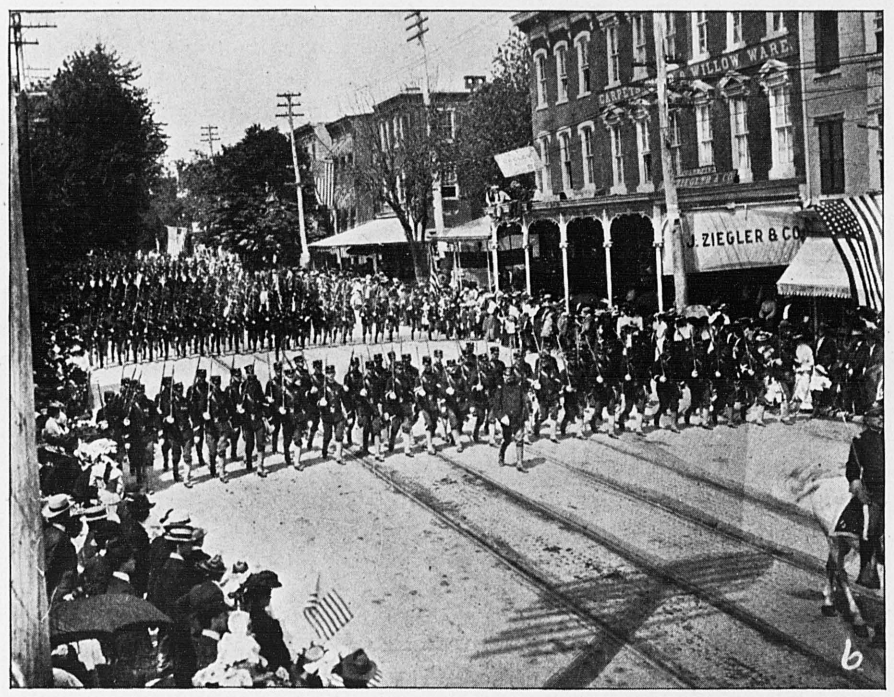
1. The first thing to engage the attention of the quartermaster in preparing for the encampment should be the proper equipment of the command with everything to be provided by the Quartermaster's Department, commencing with the uniform of the men. If the com-

CAPT. FRANCIS DAEUFER AND HIS AIDES AT THE HEAD OF G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT PARDAE AT ALLENTOWN, JUNE 3, 1903

In arranging the transportation the schedules should be so fixed that troop trains will not all arrive at one hour, but they should be so scheduled as to arrive at intervals sufficient to insure against congestion. Yet the intervals should not be so great as to cause unnecessary delays. It should be impressed upon commanding officers that the matter of entraining and detraining troops is one of the most important features in the movement of large bodies, and advantage should be taken of the Annual Manoeuvres to perfect the details of this important service.

3. The next important feature with which the quartermaster will be called upon to deal will be the camp site. It will often be his province to select it and locate thereon the various organizations that are to occupy it.

A notion seems to prevail in this country that entire organizations should be camped together, that is to say, an army corps or separate division should be camped with the various sub-divisions practically in contact. This, however, in foreign services is not the practice. It is comparatively rare that a body of troops larger than a brigade occupies one camp site. A corps would occupy an area thirty miles square with its units scattered over the area in an orderly manner, yet making every good camp site available.

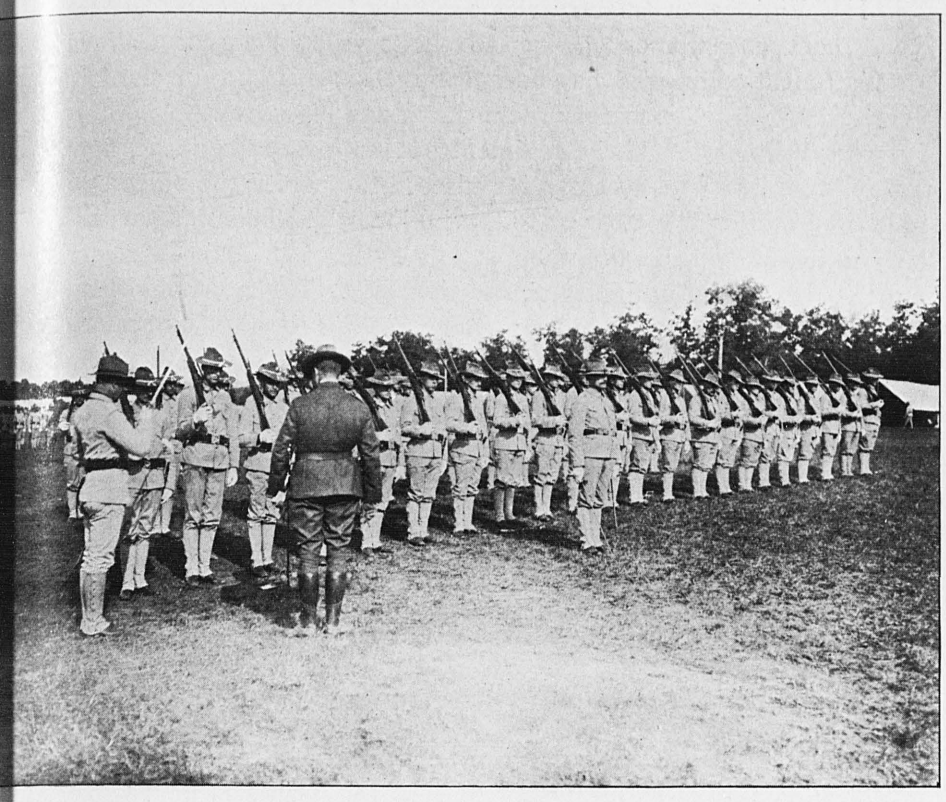


2ND BATTALION, 4TH INFANTRY, WITH MAJOR B. RUSH FIELD (13TH INFANTRY) COMMANDING, ALLENTOWN, JUNE 3, 1903

manding officer has not already done so he should announce in orders the uniform to be worn in the camp and the quartermaster should at once proceed to make requisition in order to complete it for his entire command. It is essential that an itemized list of camp equipage be made up, including the number of tents and all camp equipage to be allowed for each organization, and if these are not already provided, steps should be taken to provide them.

2. The clothing for the men having been provided and the necessary camp equipage, the next consideration will be the transportation of the men, equipment and supplies to the camp. In making these arrangements with the railroad companies the stipulations should be entirely explicit as to the kind of accommodations to be furnished. The department is generous in this case and it is customary, where there is all night travel, to provide Pullman tourist sleeping cars, and where the travel is by day a sufficient number of coaches so that not less than two double seats shall be provided for every three men. Provision should also be made to provide ample water for both drinking and ablutionary purposes. This can be done by requiring the company to place barrels on the platforms. It will be necessary to insist upon all details of this character, otherwise the troops will be carried with a great degree of discomfort and the quartermaster will come in for a corresponding amount of condemnation.

COLONEL C. T. O'NEILL COMMANDING 4TH INFANTRY (AND CO. "H," 8TH; CO. "I," 13TH) ON JUNE 3RD AS ESCORT TO DEPT. PENNA. GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC COLONEL HARRY C. TREXLER AND CAPTAIN FRED R. DRAKE ARE SEEN IMMEDIATELY IN REAR OF COLONEL O'NEILL



LIEUT. COLONEL LEWIS. T. BROWN, A. D. C. STAFF OF COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF MUSTERING CO. "G," 8TH INFANTRY, N. G. P., CAPTAIN E. M. VALE, AT MT. GRETNA

Of course when in the immediate vicinity of the enemy these units will be drawn together.

In choosing a camp site due regard should be had to its convenience to lines of supply and to water. The site should be carefully examined with a view to ascertaining its drainage, and the soil, if there is a choice, should be considered. Sod is of course desirable, and a gravelly soil is best. After the site has been selected, the definite locations should be fixed for each organization which is to occupy a position in the camp.

It is suggested that, providing the ground lends itself satisfactorily, the most desirable method of laying out the camp is to establish a central avenue, which will be used for hauling heavy supplies, etc. The foot of the company streets will rest on the margin of this avenue and at the sides of the avenue will be dug the company sinks, if dug sinks are to be used. If not, such devices as are to be supplied should be located here. The first tent should be not less than sixty feet away and preferably more than that distance; the company kitchen should be at the opposite end of the company street from the sink. Across a parade not less than than 100 feet wide will be the line of the company officer's tents on a line parallel to the avenue for heavy hauling. Organizations should be located upon such a site in the most convenient manner and in conformity to the views of the commanding officer. Avenues should be left between organizations, so that it will never be necessary for vehicles to cross the site occupied by any organization. It is rare that a site will be found which will lend itself without modification to the suggestions here made and this scheme is merely recommended and it can be varied to suit conditions. The hospital should of course receive the choicest and most secluded location.

4. The organizations being located in camp, on paper, the quartermaster should turn his attention to the details of furnishing wood, water and forage, and camp transportation, and incidentally to the disposal of the sewage.

A careful estimate should be made of the transportation that will be required for camp purposes, to haul equipment, supplies, etc., and provision should be made to furnish it by contract or otherwise. Contracts should also be made for supply of wood and whatever forage may be needed. The very important item of water should be considered in detail and the precise manner in which it is to be furnished should be considered—whether from running stream near the camp, by hauling water, by sunken wells or by piping the water to points where required. The disposal of sewage and garbage is an even more important matter, and it is the duty of the quartermaster to carefully consider all the means to be provided for this service. The instructions of the commanding officer on this subject should in general be had, and he should indicate if dug latrines, dry earth closets, the odorless excavator system, cesspool system, or regular sewage system are to be used.

All these details will of course depend upon the funds available for the purpose. If the simplest form of sink—the dug latrine—is used, it will be found that the most effective means of keeping it sweet and at the same time rendering it uninhabitable for flies will be by burning a small amount of crude oil or kerosene thrice daily in the pit. The oil can be sprinkled on hay or straw and a match applied and the purification is thorough. The same process can be applied in the vicinity of the kitchen in case the earth becomes saturated with grease, etc., from the company kitchen. Lime, under such circumstances, is an excellent disinfectant.

The wood and forage should be placed in a storage depot which should be located in the vicinity of the general corral.

All arrangements should be made in advance for supplying the camp so that there will be nothing left for the quartermaster to do but to handle the supplies themselves.

5. The last important duty of the quartermaster in connection with the annual encampment will be the breaking of camp and arranging for the return transportation. It should be the especial care of the quartermaster to ascertain the precise amount of railroad transportation that will be required for each organization, and its destination in ample time in advance so that full and complete arrangements can be had with the transportation companies.

The equipment necessary should be called for a sufficient time in advance to insure its being available and it should be made available for the inspection of the quartermaster before submitted to the commanding officer of the troops, who will finally decide as to its sufficiency in accordance with existing regulations.

An excellent plan is for the quartermaster to provide himself with a sketch plan of all the railroad sidings in the vicinity of the camp available for his use for the storage of the railroad equipment required for the movement. A sketch of the make-up of each train should be furnished by the quartermaster to the transportation company, and also to each separate organization, so far as it is affected.

You have all had sufficient opportunity for observing the scope

THE rapidity of the movement of the troops of the Third Brigade first called into service in the recent tour of riot duty in the coal regions was universally commented upon at the time. During the recent encampment General Gobin's Brigade gave another demonstration of rapid work. The General had been notified that the special train bearing the Governor and his staff would arrive at Mt. Gretna at 4 o'clock, and made preparations to receive him accordingly. About 3 o'clock in the afternoon the Governor was expected, General Gobin received a telegram from Adjutant General Stewart, stating that the train would arrive at 3.30 o'clock. There was no telephone service between the headquarters and the regiments, so the General's two aids were sent through the camp to notify the regimental commanders. Colonel Hutchison, commanding the Eighth Regiment, the regiment farthest from the parade ground, was in his tent asleep. The companies were gotten out, the regiments formed and marched to the parade ground and the Brigade put into line in just fourteen minutes from the receipt of the telegram announcing the change in the hour.

After receiving the Governor the Brigade changed direction to the right and returned to quarters, marching past the Governor's headquarters as it did so. An erroneous impression has gone out in some quarters as to this march past, a criticism having been made that no salutes were given. The Governor and Adjutant General were previously informed that this was to be in no sense considered a review, and that as it was simply an informal returning to quarters no salutes would be given. The criticism was only made by those who had no knowledge of this fact.

THE Eighteenth Infantry was seriously handicapped at the recent encampment owing to the severe illness of Colonel Frank I. Rutledge, who has been confined to his bed for the last five weeks with inflammatory rheumatism and high fever. Notwithstanding this drawback, the regiment put up a very fine inspection. There seemed to be a common impulse on the part of the officers to give the best possible support to the junior field. This was particularly noticeable on the afternoon of July 27th, when Major McNary put the command through the inspection drill. The ceremonies and regimental evolutions were remarkably well executed, and much favorable comment was made by several prominent officials who witnessed the work.

RIFLE practice this season in the First Brigade is a very serious problem, and unless some immediate steps are taken to allow the men practice considerable interest in this department will have been lost and much disappointment will be felt by the men who are anxious to qualify continuously as well as maintaining the reputation of their company and regimental teams. It is unofficially stated that arrangements are under way to take the several organizations to Mt. Gretna, one battalion at a time, and allowing it two days for qualification. It is earnestly hoped that this plan will be encouraged by the higher officials.

THE members of Company "E," of the Thirteenth Infantry, located at Honesdale, were given a very pleasant surprise last week, when they received 106 photographs of the company taken at Mt. Gretna. This was a gift of Colonel Charles C. Pratt, staff of the Commander-in-Chief.

NOTES

First Regiment

Captain Hess, of the First Infantry, who is always full of humor, relates some amusing incidents that occurred at Camp Hastings. One was that of a "rooky" brother officer using an umbrella on a rainy day from his quarters to the mess tent, and that another new wearer of the shoulder straps stated that he expected to be excused from rifle practice this season as he and his men were entirely too busy to give up the necessary time for this work, and that drill regulations should be modified so as to conform to the ideas of officers wishing to go through the regimental and battalion movements in the simplest manner possible.

Third Regiment

Sergeant Albin Krebs and Corporal Clarence Huey, Company "I," Third Infantry, spent the week of July 25th at Sea Girt in practicing preparatory to competing for positions on the regimental team. A strong company team comprising Sergeant Krebs, Sergeant Thompson, Corporal Huey, Privates C. Boche, Nye, Rice and Thalheimer will enter the inter-company contest and expect to give some of the older teams a "good stiff run."

Extensive improvements will be made on the Third Regiment Armory, so that when the fall and winter drills open the men will have a gymnasium, pool and billiard room, swimming pool and other first-class club facilities. New quarters for the band with proper locker room will also be provided. When this work is completed the Third will be as comfortably fixed as conditions in the Pennsylvania Guard will permit.

Fifth Regiment

The infant company of the division is "E" of the Fifth Infantry, located at Altoona, which was mustered June 29th. The company showed up in splendid form at Camp McKinley, and much credit is due to the untiring efforts of its able commander, Captain Elmer K. Rupp, who for several weeks prior to the encampment drilled the company nightly. Captain Rupp is an old and enthusiastic guardsman, and with the fine personnel of his company will without doubt reach a high standard of efficiency in the Guard.

Ninth Regiment

The rifle range of the Ninth Infantry, which is located at Sugar Notch, about three miles from Wilkes-Barre, is next to Mt. Gretna in completeness. It was formally opened on July 8th, when a number of distinguished citizens were invited to participate in the ceremonies. Among those present were Judge F. W. Wheaton, Judge John Lynch, Judge A. M. Freas, Hon. H. W. Palmer, General Paul A. Oliver, Colonel E. B. Beaumont, Hon. W. J. Scott, J. B. Woodward, W. S. Biddle, R. V. A. Norris, Dr. F. C. Johnson, S. B. Bennett, W. G. Eno, I. W. Stark, Arthur Hillman, George P. Strome, Captain Oscar J. Harvey, Colonel L. C. Darte, Theodore Newell, and many others. Colonel Dougherty, in connection with the opening, made some appropriate remarks, after which the Krags were tested by several of the prominent citizens. This was followed by a luncheon and band concert. The affair was very enjoyable and every one seemed to be well pleased with the excellent facilities now accorded the Ninth Infantry for their rifle practice.

Twelfth Regiment

Captain William H. Moyer, the first Inspector of Rifle Practice of the Twelfth Regiment, and later connected with the District of Columbia National Guard, and one of its best shots, has been appointed warden of the United States Penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga.

The members of Company "I," Twelfth Regiment, presented Lieutenant Parazette Hopkins, during the recent encampment, with a regulation sabre.

State

The presence of the regular army hospital company at Mt. Gretna was a great aid to the newly organized hospital department of the Third Brigade.

The Inspectors of Rifle Practice of the Third Brigade have united in a request that the rifle practice rules be so amended that a non-commissioned officer may witness scores of all grades. It is practically impossible in the country regiments to have a commissioned officer on the range at all times.

The proposed spectacular production of the "Spanish American War," at Mt. Gretna, by the Twelfth Regiment Band, had to be abandoned because the necessary electric lights could not be secured.

On the last day of the annual encampment General Gobin announced the following changes in the non-commissioned staff of the Third Brigade. Quartermaster Sergeant Joseph S. Kilbourn, honorably discharged at his own request. Color Sergeant Hummel K. Maeyer, to be Quartermaster Sergeant. Trooper David Watts, of the Governor's Troop, to be Color Sergeant. Battalion Sergeant Major John S. Potts, Eighth Regiment, to be Chief Musician, vice Greenawalt, transferred to Principal Musician, Thirteenth Regiment Bugle Corps.

No regiment in the State made a more decided advance than did the Eighth during the past year.

Robert Gamble, formerly First Sergeant of Company D, Eighth Regiment, and a member of the Regimental Rifle Team, is now a member of the First Regiment.

The members of the Governor's staff are all completely equipped with the new regulation uniforms and equipments.

The new dress cap and the new sabre are already seen very generally throughout the division.

Adjutant General Thomas J. Stewart will shortly decide on a design for the service medals. It is expected that there will be three grades of this decoration as in the State of New Jersey commencing with the ten-year bronze, fifteen, silver, and twenty-five, gold. These will be attached to a ribbon and suspended from the neck.

Colonel Albert J. Logan and Mr. William Keech, both of Pittsburgh, have in view the purchase or leasing of the hotel property at Crescent Springs.

Among the important communications recently received by First Brigade headquarters is one from the War Department requesting information as to how many captains and companies could devote sixty days next season to a tour of duty at some Western army reservation for the purpose of grand manoeuvres. This is getting to look like the real thing, and Brigade and Division Encampments may be a thing of the past. Captain Longacre, of the United States Navy, has also requested information regarding the usefulness of the First Regiment rifle range. His communication was referred to Colonel Wendell P. Bowman of that command.

Our State Naval Militia has confined its tour of duty this season to three cruises on the "Shearwater," the first being under the command of Captain Ruschenberger; the second under Lieutenant Smith, and the third from Saturday, August 8th to the 15th inclusive, by Lieutenant Commander Mitcheson. The entire working of the ship is conducted by the members of the two divisions and so successful have they been in this that Commander Coles, of the United States Navy, has personally complimented them on their good work.

Division "B," under command of Lieutenant H. H. Smith, is rapidly improving. New enlistments have taken place and it is confidently expected that before the next inspection an entire change for the better will have taken place in the division.

The Pittsburgh Press of July 30th speaks of Colonel William F. Richardson, the Division Quartermaster, as an aged Colonel. The writer evidently has but a slight acquaintance with Colonel "Bill," and his feebleness might best be judged by a little encounter which happened at Somerset before the arrival of the troops. The big, brawny boss carpenter of the gang of civilian employees got very abusive and insubordinate, and finally got "cussing" the Colonel to such an extent that he was commanded to halt. This he refused to do, and said he could wipe up the soil on the hills of Somerset with any 'dol garn officer in the outfit. Suiting his action to the word, he started in on the "aged Colonel," but soon found out he was up against a "Fitzsimmons." The result was a beautiful pair of rainbow stripes over his optics and a day's work for the village dentist. He meekly apologized and offered to do all kinds of good work for the doughty Quartermaster. It is needless to say that they were good friends after that.

The Pennsylvania State Rifle Association has officially adopted a pennant consisting of a blue field and a gold keystone center with the letters S. R. A. above and Pennsylvania below. The National Rifle Association has donated a medal to the State Association to be competed for on August 29th, at 3.00 P. M., at Sea Girt. Appropriate quarters have been secured on "luxury row," when all members will have the privilege of shooting by paying a post entrance fee of one dollar ($1.00).

Much regret has been expressed throughout the State by the resignation of Major D. S. B. Chew, Ordnance Officer and Acting Inspector of Rifle Practice of the First Brigade. Major Chew has been an ardent supporter of rifle practice for many years and has spent much time and money for furthering the interests of this department, and it is still hoped that the popular major will be prevailed upon to withdraw his resignation and continue in the service.

Berwick, Pa., is one of the busiest towns in the State to-day, and full of boom. There is an excellent company of the Sons of Veterans stationed here, which is clamoring to be admitted to the Guard. Colonel A. D. Seeley is the prime factor in this project.

and importance of this single function of the Quartermaster's Department to realize the necessity for the most constant attention to this subject in order that the welfare of the command may not suffer. It is not sufficient that the quartermaster do the things that he is commanded to do by his superior officer, but he must himself be a man of discretion, originality and intelligence. No officer of the staff of the commanding officers has it in his power to relieve the commanding officer of as much detail and annoyance as has the quartermaster. It is a well established principle that the commander of a force, whether large or small, should be freed from the annoying details of the various staff departments as far as may be practicable in order to enable him to devote his time and attention to the larger questions pertaining to his command, whether they be the strategic features of a campaign, or the interior matters pertaining to drill, discipline and administration.

Finally, let me say to my brother quartermasters, that we have as an inspiration in our task, practically unlimited opportunities for the constant use of all the inventive, creative, executive and administrative abilities that each man may possess, and for the exercise of all the faculties of his intelligence. Receiving the raw recruit, unprepared and unequipped, it is the duty of our department to provide him with the necessary clothing, and fit him out in the uniform of a soldier, give him shelter of tentage or quarters, supply him with a bed and bedding, with light for his illumination, fuel for warmth, and to cook his food, ranges, ovens and utensils in which to prepare it, and with the table and tableware from which to eat his meals. It furnishes him mounts and draught animals and the forage they require; it carries the soldier and his equipment by pack mule, wagon, rail, river and over-sea transportation to distant shores, and the scene of active service; provides the bugle, that sounds the call to battle and the flag that follows to victory. His duty done, bears him back triumphantly to the mother, or sweetheart, or wife in the dear old land he loves, or should he fall in battle or die not less gloriously, but more sadly, from the onslaught of some insidious disease, 'tis the quartermaster that furnishes him his last narrow tenement, bears the sacred remains home to lie in his native soil, provides the grave in which he sleeps, and keeps green the sod above his resting place. (Long continued applause.)

UP THE HUDSON.

A BEAUTIFUL DAY'S RIDE ON THE "AMERICAN RHINE."

The Hudson has been styled the American Rhine, but the name hardly applies as the scenic beauties of this magnificent river are with one exception, the absence of ancient castles and ruins, far superior to those of the far-famed Rhine.

Fenimore Cooper aptly terms it "The river of beautiful surprises," as in several places the boat apparently about to plunge bow on into a precipitous bluff, with a sudden turn, opens up another vista of beautiful scenery.

A splendid opportunity to have a daylight view of the fine natural scenery and of magnificent summer homes of wealthy New Yorkers is afforded by the Reading System's Up The Hudson excursions. Special trains leave Reading Terminal 7.30 A. M., Thursday, August 6th, 13th, and Wednesday, August 26th, and connect at Jersey City with the steamer St. Johns for a trip round New York Bay and up the Hudson to West Point and Newburgh. Returning the steamer leaves West Point (Cranston's Dock) about 3.30 P. M., and excursionists arrive home in the early evening.

The fare from Philadelphia is only $2.50 for round trip. For fare from other points and time of special or connecting trains consult any Philadelphia & Reading Ticket Agent.

FRANK K. PATTERSON,
Colonel and General Inspector of Rifle Practice.
By order of SAMUEL W. PENNYPACKER,
Governor and Commander-in-Chief.
THOMAS J. STEWART,
Adjutant General.

Announcement is hereby made of the death of Corporal Abraham Mosteller, Company "D," Sixth Regiment, N. G. P., on July 18, 1903, while at his parents' home in Mont Clare, after having been sent there two days before from Camp Hastings on sick furlough.

Corporal Mosteller had been ill for some time, but his enthusiasm and interest in the National Guard led him to take the risks of camp life.

Abraham Mosteller enlisted in Company "D," Sixth Regiment, on May 4, 1899, and a month later was appointed Corporal. He re-enlisted on May 4, 1902, and was re-appointed Corporal.

CORPORAL ABRAHAM MOSTELLER
CO. "D," 6TH INFANTRY, WHO DIED WHILE ON SICK LEAVE, JULY 18TH

He was a thorough soldier, having his heart in his work he went about his duties in an earnest and conscientious manner. As a man, he had the love and respect of all his fellow-guardsmen for his honest sincerity, his pleasant manner and his sincere straightforward Christian life.

The funeral was held from his home in Spring City, on Wednesday, July 22d, the company taking part in the services. All members assembled at the armory at 12.30 P. M. and took the 12.45 trolley to Zion Church, where the services were held. Blue uniforms, caps and white gloves were worn.

THE LATE COLONEL CLARENCE G. JACKSON
QUARTERMASTER GENERAL ON THE STAFF OF THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF, MARCH 12, 1879

The subject of our sketch, the late Colonel Clarence G. Jackson, was one of the best-known and efficient officers in the State. He was intimately associated and the personal friend of Governors Hoyt and Hartranft, and did much towards the reorganization of the Guard. During the dark days of the civil strife, when quite a young man, he offered his service to the Federal Government, serving his State and Nation with distinction. He was commissioned Second Lieutenant of Company "H," of the 84th Pennsylvania Volunteers, August 2, 1862, and subsequently appointed First Lieutenant January 18, 1863, and on July 1, 1863, he was promoted to the rank of Captain. He was wounded and captured at Chancellorsville, Va., May 3, 1863, and finally transferred to Company "H," 57th Regiment, P. V., January 13, 1865. After returning to civil life for several years he again became imbued with the military spirit and was appointed Aide-de-Camp on the staff of Major General E. S. Osborne, Ninth Division, National Guard of Pennsylvania, ranking as such from June 1, 1870. He was appointed Colonel and Aide-de-Camp on the staff of Governor John F. Hartranft, August 1, 1874, from Major General E. S. Osborne's staff, Third Division, his commission expiring June, 1876. He was appointed Colonel and Quartermaster General by Governor Hartranft, March 12, 1879, and died May 3, 1880.
